News anchor: Now to a growing problem facing high schools and universities around the world: an artificial intelligence software called ChatGPT. While the software has been a hit with investors with Microsoft reportedly planning to invest 10 billion dollars, students are using it to cheat on tests and even write essays. CBS Nikki Battiste shows us how it works and what parents should know.

Darren Hick: This was unlike anything I dealt with before ...

Nikki Battiste (voice-over): Darren Hick, an assistant professor of philosophy at Furman University in South Carolina, recently caught a student using ChatGPT to plagiarize a written assignment.

Darren Hick: This was a very well written essay but the things that they said were just thoroughly wrong.

Nikki Battiste (voice-over): He ran the student's essay through a detection program to see if the paper was written by a human.

Darren Hick: I was now 99 point whatever percent confident that this was written by Ai and luckily for my purposes, the student copped to it. They admitted that they had used ChatGPT.

Nikki Battiste (voice-over): New York City's Department of Education recently banned ChatGPT citing the safety and accuracy of content. OpenAI, the creators of ChatGPT, say that program should not be used for misleading purposes and they're developing ways to identify text generated by its system. What makes chat GPT different than other AI systems is its ability to learn and respond to unique conversations.

Nikki Battiste: I'm going to ask chat GPT to write me a 300-word essay on the impact of Technologies Evolution on society. In less than a minute I had my 300-word essay written entirely by artificial intelligence.

Nikki Battiste (voice-over): Princeton student Edward Tien is also working on a program to outsmart the artificial intelligence.

Nikki Battiste: What are your tips for parents who want to make sure their children are doing their own homework.

Edward Tien: Students should try out these new technologies because it also benefits them to learn what's out there but at the same time, education is something we take into our own hands, and we learn the most by actually doing things ourselves.
